Which specific activities or discussions helped you engage most with the theme?

18 responses

1. Case studies presented by prof. Tornatora and her phd students
2. The professors' lectures offered critical insights from diverse contexts, deepening my understanding of how public space design intersects with climate vulnerability.
3. One of the activities that helped me connect most with the theme was the lecture by Prof. Marina Tornatora. She shared several projects related to SoilSpace, where she explored the relationship between land, memory, and public space.
4. The practical workshops and discussions with experts helped me engage most with the theme.
5. The lectures from various professors opened up new perspectives on the theme, and the engaging discussions with both professors and students from different countries further deepened my understanding to the topic

Do you have suggestions for new social or networking activities to include in the future?

18 responses

1. Mixed group activities
2. More visits, or visits that were relatable to the theme of soil and space in one of the presentations mentioned
3. I think it would be interesting to have some tour around the city or something if that nature. However all the social activities were a lot of fun.
4. Everything was well organized and thought out. I am very happy to have been a part of this experience.

Which aspects of the Summer School did you appreciate the most?

18 responses

1. I liked meeting new people and listening to lectures (especially the ones with student's works because it was a new perspective and quite inspiring).

2. The ability to learn and get to know different cultures and their ways of dealing with the soil space topic.
3. Basically everything, lectures, organisation, the possibility of meeting new colleagues and professors, museum and scilla visit
4. What I appreciated the most was that all the professors shared different works and research on similar and connected topics. This gave us the chance to see the main theme from many perspectives and helped us understand it more deeply.
5. What I appreciated most about the Summer School was the opportunity to explore a topic I hadn't previously engaged with in depth, which significantly broadened my academic perspective. Additionally, meeting and working alongside people from diverse backgrounds enriched the experience.

Which aspects could be improved in the future?

18 responses

1. It was a great experience.
2. Overall, the program was already at a very high level, both in content and organization. If anything, perhaps slightly more time for hands-on or group work could further enhance the experience
3. I was satisfied with everything!
